THEN. In the spring in the height of the seasou, Was the first time ever they mot ; He was skilled in the art of flirtation

And she's decided coquette. For weeks they were always together The sequel is easily guessed ; They soon became really in earnest,

In what was meant for a jost. They rode and they strolled in the moonlight, And she was so gracious, so sweet -That nothing but prudence restrained him From laying his heart at her feet.

And when in the autumn they parted. Each vowing to never forget, His voice frembled ever so slightly -Her eyes seemed suspiciously set.

He saw her again in the winter, "As he at his club window sat, While she flashed a look of inquiry From under her Gainsbornigh hat.

"Now where have I seen him," she marmured, Recalling occasions and dates : Oh, he's that conceited young fellow

I firsted with so at the "States." "There's the girl I 'spooned' with last summer, Thought he, as he lit his cigar, By Jove, she was really in earnest; I carried the thing most too far."

The value of deep breathing with a closed mouth has recently been preached with emphasis by many actions of the labor Contracts for the District of Wailuku. jan1 81 ly with emphasis by many eminent German doctors, including Professor Kecham, Marker, Reich, Thilenius, and others. Anyone may convince hunself of its usefulness if he will be at the pains to practice it regularly and methodically. Its value consists in the beneficient influence upon the life of the blood, muscles, and nerves, and in its invigoration of the digestive and respiratory organs. Its preachers even claim for it a power of suppressing the germs of malady in the latter. The methodical use of this Breath Gymnastics' (Athemgymnastics), as Dr. Paul Hiemeyer, of Leipsig, calls it, may be soon described. The gymnasist must take his stand out of doors in the good air, or at least at an open widow, and inhale by means of his nose -- not of his mouthsuccessive atmospheric draughts. The exercise must not be gone through hastily or spismodically, but patiently, deliberately, and pleasurably, and with the fullest attention and intent on, so that the introduced air may force its way without check into the smaller air-passages. The inhalation must be followed by an energetic and forcible exhalation. A complete internal change of air' does not indeed take place, but only a p rtial and very moderate change, because sidu il air,' remains, and always must remain, in the body. Men in studies and atic bre thing gymnastics the profit of which soon becomes evident in the young. Among adults the regular employment of such exercises is likely to lapse through negligence, went of opportunity, or forgetf alness, though, even in their case, the real difficulty to be overcome is the serious beginning of such a process. After a few weeks, however, all the labor and burdensomeness of the operations disappear, and it grows natural and easy, and needs no special attention to keep the pumpworks' in close offices, as one authority reminds us, form an inveterate habit of incomplete and unfinished breathing, which can only be cured by artificial exercise and if this is done, the bodily, and these with the mental, organism, must necessarily suffer. Dr. Hiemeyer, in his book on the lungs (Die Lunge) and in the second edition of his result from t king cold has dwelt upon the importance of the training of the lungs, and thinks that teachers in schools ought to im-

Anybody wishing to accustom himself to regular daily 'lung exercises' should take a lonely walk or stand alone in a room at the open window, and count his aspirations giving his whole thought to the business. From 50 to 60 inspirations should be taken in one course, perhaps fewer at the beginning, but more later; and this cycle be repeated twice or three times every day.

In a short time the breath gymnasiast loses all need of counting, and learns t know instinctively where and where to stop. the mechanism of the exercise becoming, so to speak, self-directing. A valuable subsidiary product of these exercises is the normal gain which recrues to the ordinary business of breathing; the practised exerciser of his lungs in this manner comes insensibly and without forethought to take deeper and longer breaths of air, and the breath accustoms itself by degrees to perform its obligations better than hitherto. that is to say, naturally, and without any effort of will or recollection.

The Wolf and the Porcupine.

A wolf by chance met a porcupine. Brother 'said he 'you surprise me to be armed as you are. We are not in wartime, but in the time of peace. Believe me; lay aside your arms; you can take them again when you think proper to do so. 'Friend,' replied the porcupine, 'I shall not let go my arms. We are in times of peace, you say. That may be, but it is not the question here. Am I not in the company of a wolf? A prudent man is always on his guard against the wiles of an enemy, and states will receive with caution proposals for disarmament except it is mutual.

An old Connecticut deacon once took to church with him a young man, educated, refined, and a lover of nature. The autumnal hues were at the hight of their glory, and the young man called his attention of his companion to a beautiful clump of trees, The staggering response that the old deacon WINES, ALES AND SPIRITS, gave was, 'I never see trees on Sunday.'
